

"Liberty and Union, Now and Forever, One and Inseparable."

Poetry.

BY MRS. ISABEL M. RICHARDSON.

We now call our bright land a land of the free,
Though dark stained with blood is the earth and the sea,
From the veins of our heroes who have fallen in fight,
For vengeance poured on us with power and might.
The bright bands of the household are broken in twain,
For loved ones were slain forth and again,
Although here on earth we can sleep them no more,
They have passed over the river to the pearl-land shore.
The eyes of fond mothers have almost shed blood,
And the white maids and widows have bowed beneath
The chastisement came and submissive we are,
But woe to the traitors who caused this sad war.
The flag of our Union in tatters was torn,
But to heaven by angels the message was borne;
And the Father of light raised the veil and looked down,
And sent angels of peace for freedom's bright crown.
And now to the nation that's far o'er the main,
You seated at our bright land, for we hold slaves in chains.
We invite you to come to a land of the free,
Where Euphrates Union leads sweet liberty.
Your prophecies thus far have all been fulfilled;
The war-drum has sounded and our hearts have been thrilled;
Our sons and our husbands been borne to the fight,
And battles have fought in the dead of the night.
The slave and the cotton have stashed us with pain,
And the North and the South been divided in twain;
And brother against brother have struck in the field,
And our bright, sunny days were turned into night.
The North in her might like a whirlwind has risen,
And the notes of the cannon have borne up to heaven;
And the great Lord of the universe wide,
Smote many to earth in their strength and their pride.
The head of the nation was struck by the foe;
And his faithful work—we could spare him to go;
And now with bright laurels his memory well adorned,
This only the mortal that has been stricken down.
He lives; yes, he lives, the immortal shall rise
To explore the fair regions of sweet paradise.
He has put on the robes that the glorified wear,
And walks with the angels in harmony there.
The bright sun of freedom rose over his head;
He struck till the darkness of slavery was dead;
He saw our proud banner exalted arise,
With stars and the stripes, borne upward toward the skies.
Now the image of God will no more be sold,
Like a beast of the field for a handful of gold,
And the Union, though spurned by the slaveholder's scorn,
Will be guarded by northern for ages unborn.
Rockland, June, 1865.

Miscellaneous.

THE SIEGE OF THE BLACK COTTAGE.

BY WILKIE COLLINS.

To begin at the beginning, I must take you back to the time after my mother's death when my only brother had gone to sea, when my sister was out at service, and when I lived alone with my father in the midst of a moor in the west of England.
The moor was covered with great limestone rocks, and intersected here and there by streamlets. The nearest habitation to ours was situated about a mile and a half, where a strip of the fertile land stretched out to the waste like a tongue. Here the outbuildings of the great Moor Farm, then in the possession of my husband's father, began. The farm-lands stretched down gently into a beautiful rich valley, lying nicely sheltered by the high platform of the moor.
When the ground began to rise again, miles and miles away, it led up to a country house called Holme Manor, belonging to a gentleman named Knifiton. Mr. Knifiton had lately married a young lady whom my mother had nursed, and whose kindness and friendship for me, her foster-sister, I shall remember gratefully to the last day of my life. These and other slight particulars it is needless to say to my story that I should tell you, and it is also necessary that you should be especially careful to keep them well in mind.
My father was by trade a stone-mason. His cottage stood a mile and a half from the nearest habitation. In all other directions we were four or five times that distance from neighbors. Being very poor people, this lonely situation had one great attraction for us—We lived rent free on it. In addition to that advantage, the stones, by shaping which my father gained his livelihood, lay all about him at his very door, so that he thought his position, solitary as it was, quite an enviable one. I can hardly say that I agreed with him, though I never complained. I was very fond of my father, and managed to make the best of my loneliness with the thought of being useful to him. Mrs. Knifiton wished to take me into her service when she married, but I declined, unwilling enough, for my father's sake. If I had gone away, he would have had nobody to live with him; and my mother made me promise on her death-bed that he should never be left to pine away alone in the midst of the bleak moor.
Our cottage, small as it was, was stoutly and snugly built, with stone from the moor as its inside, and fenced outside with well-lined stone walls, my father protected against the wet with pitch and tar. This gave to our little abode a curiously dark, dingy look, especially when it was seen from a distance; and so it had come to be called in the neighborhood, even before I was born, the Black Cottage.

I have now related the preliminary particulars which it is desirable that you should know, and may proceed at once to the pleasant task of telling you my story.
One cloudy autumn day, when I was rather more than eighteen years old, a herdsman walked over from Moor Farm with a letter which had been left there for my father. It came from a builder living at our country town, half a day's journey off, and invited my father to come to him and give his judgment about an estimate for stone work on a very large scale. My father's expenses for loss of time were to be paid, and he was to have his share of employment afterward in preparing the stone. He was only too glad, therefore, to obey the directions which the letter contained, and to prepare at once for his long walk to the country town.
Considering the time at which he received the letter, and the necessity of resting before he attempted to return, it was impossible for him to avoid being away from home for one night at least. He proposed to me, in case I disliked being left alone in the Black Cottage, to look the door and to take me to the Moor Farm to sleep with any of the milkmaids who would give me a share of her bed. I by no means liked the notion of sleeping with a girl whom I did not know, and I saw no reason for fear of being left alone for only one night; so I declined. No thieves had ever come near the cottage, and my father's presence against us; our poverty was sufficient protection against them; and of other dangers there were none that even the most timid person could apprehend. Accordingly, I got my father's dinner, laughing at the notion of my taking refuge under the protection of a milkmaid at Moor Farm. He started for his walk as soon as he had done, saying he should try and be back by dinner time the next day, leaving me and my cat Polly to take care of the house.
I cleared the table, and brightened up the fire, and had sat down to my work with the cat dozing at my feet, when I heard the tramping of horses, and, running to the door, saw Mr. and Mrs. Knifiton, with their groom behind them, riding up to the Black Cottage. It was part of the young lady's kindness never to neglect an opportunity of coming to pay me a friendly visit, and her husband was generally willing to accompany her for his wife's sake. I made my best courtesy, therefore, with a great deal of pleasure, but with no particular surprise at seeing them. They dismounted and entered the cottage, laughing and talking in great spirits. I soon heard that they were riding to the same country town for which my father was bound, and that they intended to stay with some friends there for a few days, and to return home on horseback, as they went out.
I heard this, and I also discovered that they had been having an argument, in just about money matters, as they rode along to our cottage. Mrs. Knifiton had accused her husband of inordinate extravagance, and of never being able to go out with money in his pocket without spending it if he possibly could, before returning again. Mr. Knifiton had laughingly defended himself by declaring that all his pocket money went in presents for his wife, and that, if he spent it lavishly, it was under her sole influence and superintendence.
"We are going to Cliverton now," he said to Mrs. Knifiton, naming the country town, and warning himself at our poor fire just as pleasantly as if he had been standing on his own grand hearth. "You will stop to admire every pretty thing in every one of the Cliverton shop-windows—I shall hand you the purse, and you will go in and buy. When we have reached home again, and you have had time to get tired of your purchases, you will clasp your hands in amazement, and declare that you are quite shocked at my inordinate extravagance. I am only the banker who keeps the money; you, my love, are the spendthrift who throws it all away."
"Am I, sir?" said Mrs. Knifiton, with a look of mock indignation. "We will see if I am to be misrepresented in this way with impunity. Bessie, my dear, (turning to me,) you shall judge how far I deserve the character which that unscrupulous man has just given me. I am the spendthrift, am I? And you are only the banker? Very well. Banker, give me my money at once, if you please."
Mr. Knifiton laughed, and took some gold and silver from his waistcoat pocket. "No, no," said Mrs. Knifiton, "you may as well have got them for me for necessary expenses. Is that all the money you have about you? What do I feel here?" and she tapped her husband on the chest, just above the breast-pocket of his coat.
Mr. Knifiton laughed again, and produced his pocket-book. His wife snatched it out of his hand, opened it, and drew out some bank-notes, put them back again immediately, and, closing the pocket-book, stepped across the room to my poor mother's little walnut-wood bookcase, the only bit of valuable furniture we had in the house.
"What are you going to do there?" asked Mr. Knifiton, following his wife.
"Mr. Knifiton opened the glass door of the book-case, put the pocket-book on one of the lower shelves, closed and locked the door again, and gave me the key."
"You called me a spendthrift just now," she said. "There is my answer. Not one farthing of that money shall you spend at Cliverton on me. Keep the key in your pocket, Bessie, and, whatever Mr. Knifiton may say, on no account let him have it until we call again on our way back. No, sir, I won't trust you with that money in your pocket in the town of Cliverton. I will make sure of your taking it all home again, by leaving it here in more trustworthy hands than yours, until we ride back. Bessie, my dear, what do you say to that as a lesson in economy inducted on a prudent husband by a spendthrift wife?"
She took Mr. Knifiton's arm while she spoke, and drew him away to the door. He protested and made some resistance, but she easily carried her point, for he was far too fond of her to have a will of his own, in any trifling matter between them. Whatever the matter might say, Mr. Knifiton was a model husband in the estimation of all the women that knew him. "You will see us as we come back, Bessie. Till then, you are our banker, and the pocket-book is yours," cries Mrs. Knifiton, gayly at the door. Her husband lifted her into the saddle, mounted himself, and away they both galloped over the moor, as wild and happy as a couple of children.

Although my being trusted with money by Mrs. Knifiton was no novelty, (in her maiden days she always employed me to pay her dress-maker's bills,) I did not feel quite easy at having a pocket-book full of bank-notes left by her in my care. I had no positive apprehensions about the safety of the deposit placed in my hands, but it was one of the odd points in my character then (and I think it is still) to feel an unreasonably strong objection to charging myself with money responsibilities of any kind, even to suit the convenience of my dearest friends. As soon as I was left alone, the very sight of the pocket-book behind the glass door of the book-case began to worry me, and instead of returning to my work, I puzzled my brains about finding a place to lock it up in, where it would not be exposed to the view of any chance passer-by who might stray into the Black Cottage.
This is not an easy matter to compass in a poor house like ours, where we had nothing valuable to put under lock and key. After running over various hiding-places in my mind, I thought of my tea-caddy, a present from Mrs. Knifiton, which I always kept out of harm's way in my own bed-room. Most unluckily—as it afterward turned out—instead of taking the pocket-book to the tea-caddy, I went into my room first to take the tea-caddy to the pocket-book. I only acted in this roundabout way from sheer thoughtlessness, and severely enough I was punished for it, as you will acknowledge yourself when you have read more of my story.
I was just getting the tea-caddy out of my cupboard, when I heard foot-steps in the passage, and running out immediately, saw two men walk into the kitchen—the room in which I had received Mr. and Mrs. Knifiton. I inquired what they wanted sharply enough, and one of them immediately answered that they wanted my father. He turned to ward me, of course, as he spoke, and recognized him as a stone-mason, going among his comrades by the name of Shifty Dick. He bore a very bad character for everything but wrestling, a sport for which the working men of our parts were famous all through the country. Shifty Dick was champion, and he had got his name from some tricks in wrestling, for which he was celebrated. He was a tall, heavy man, with a lowering, scarred face, and huge hairy hands—the last visitor in the world that I should have been glad to see under any circumstances. His companion was a stranger, whom he addressed by the name of Jerry—a quick, dapper, wicked-looking man, who took to his cap at me with mock politeness, and showed, in so doing, a very bad head, with some very ugly-looking knobs on it. I distrusted him worse than I did Shifty Dick, and managed to get between his leering eyes and the book-case, as I told the two that my father was gone out, and that I did not expect him back till the next day.
The words were hardly out of my mouth before I repeated that my anxiety to get rid of my unwelcome visitors had made me incautious enough to acknowledge that my father would be away from home for the whole night.
Shifty Dick and his companion looked at each other when I unwisely let out the truth, but made no remark except to ask me if I would give them a drop of beer. I answered sharply that I had no beer in the house, having no fear of the consequences of refusing them drink, because I knew that plenty of men were at work within hail, in a neighboring quarry. The two looked at each other again when I denied having any beer to give them, and Jerry (as I am obliged to call him, knowing no other name by which to distinguish the fellow,) took off his cap to me once more, and with a kind of black-guards gentility about him, said they would have the pleasure of calling the next day, when my father was at home. I said good afternoon as ungraciously as possible, and, to my great relief, they both left the cottage immediately afterward.
As soon as they were well away, I washed them from the door. They trudged off in the direction of Moor Farm; and, as it was beginning to get dusk, I soon lost sight of them.
Half an hour afterward, I looked out again. The wind had risen with the sunset, but the mist was rising, and a heavy rain was beginning to fall. Never did the lonely prospect of the moor look so dreary as it looked to my eyes that evening. Never did I regret any slight thing more sincerely than I then regretted the leaving of Mr. Knifiton's pocket-book in my charge. I cannot say that I suffered under any actual alarm, for I felt sure to certain that neither Shifty Dick nor Jerry had got a chance of setting their eyes on so small a thing as the pocket-book while they were in the kitchen; but there was a vague distrust troubling me—a suspicion on the night of a disliking of the fellow, which I never remember having experienced before. This feeling so increased after I had closed the door and gone back to the kitchen, that when I heard the voices of the quarrymen as they passed our cottage on their way home to the village in the valley below Moor Farm, I stepped out into the passage with a momentary notion of telling them how I was situated, and asking them for advice and protection.
I had hardly formed this idea, however, before I dismissed it. None of the quarrymen were intimate friends of mine. I had a nodding acquaintance with them, and believed them to be honest men, as times went. But my own common sense told me that what little knowledge of their characters I had was by no means sufficient to warrant me in admitting them into my confidence in the matter of the pocket-book. I had seen enough of poverty and poor men to know what a terrible temptation a large sum of money is to those whose whole lives are passed in scraping up shillings by weary hard work. It is one thing to write fine sentiments in books about incorruptible honesty, and another thing to put those sentiments in practice when one day's work is all that a man has to set up in the way of an obstacle between starvation and his own fireside.

The only resource that remained was to carry the pocket-book with me to Moor Farm, and ask permission to pass the night there. But I could not persuade myself that there was any real necessity for taking such a course as this; and, if the truth must be told, my pride revolted at the idea of presenting myself in the character of a coward before the people of the farm. Timidity is thought rather a graceful attraction among ladies, but among poor women it is something to be laughed at. A woman with less spirit of her own than I had, and always shall have, would have considered twice in my situation before she made up her mind to encounter the jokes of plowmen and the jeers of milkmaids. As for me, I had hardly considered about going to the farm before I despised myself for entertaining any such notion. "No, no," I thought, "I am not the woman to walk a mile and a half through rain, and mist, and darkness, to tell a whole kitchenful of colts that I ever felt the slightest apprehension earlier in the day. I sang as I washed up the tea-things; and even the cat seemed to catch the infection of my good spirits. I never knew the pretty creature so playful as she was that evening."
The tea-things put by, I took up my knitting, and worked away at it so long that I began at last to get drowsy. The fire was so bright and comforting that I did not notice resolution enough to go to bed, but sat staring lazily into the blaze with my knitting on my lap—sat till the plashing of the rain outside, and the fitful, sullen sobbing of the wind grew fainter and fainter on my ear. The last sounds I heard before I fairly dozed off to sleep, were the cheerful crackling of the fire and the steady purring of the cat, as she basked luxuriously in the warm light on the hearth. Those were the last sounds before I fell asleep. The sound that woke me was one loud bang at the front door.
I started up, with my heart (as the saying is) in my mouth, with a frightful momentary shuddering at the roots of my hair—I started up breathless, cold, and motionless, hardly daring to stir, lest I should find, doubtless at first whether I had dreamed about the bang at the door or whether the blow had really been struck on it.
In a minute or less there came a second bang, louder than the first. I ran out in the passage.
"Who's there?"
"Let us in," answered a voice, which I recognized immediately as the voice of Shifty Dick.
"Wait a bit, my dear, and let me explain," said a second voice, in the low, oily, jeering tones of Dick's companion—the wickedly clever little man whom he called Jerry. "You are alone in the house, my pretty little dear. You may crack your sweet voice with screaming, and there's nobody near to hear you. Listen to reason my love, and let us in. We don't want a very neat looking pocket-book which you happen to have, and your late excellent mother's four silver teaspoons, which you keep so nice and clean on the chimney-piece. If you let us in we won't hurt a hair of your head, my dear, and we promise to go away the moment we have got what we want, unless you particularly wish us to stop to tea. If you keep us out, we shall be obliged to break into the house, and then—"
"And then," burst in Shifty Dick, "we'll smash you!"
"Yes," said Jerry, "we'll smash you, my beauty. But you won't give us a doing that, will you? You'll let us in?"
This long parley gave me time to recover the effect the first bang at the door had produced on my nerves. The threats of the two villains would have terrified some women out of their senses, but the only result they produced on me was violent indignation. I had, thank God, a strong spirit of my own, and the cool, contemptuous insolence of the man Jerry effectually roused it.
"You cowardly villains!" I screamed at them through the door. "You think you can frighten me because I am only a poor girl alone in the house. You ragged, rascally scoundrels, I defy you both! I am strong, and my shutters are safe, and I am here to keep my father's house safe, and keep it I will against an army of you!"
You may imagine what a passion I was in when I vapored and blustered in that way. I heard Jerry laugh, and Shifty Dick swear a whole mouthful of oaths. Then there was a dead silence for a minute or two, and then the two ruffians attacked the door.
I rushed into the kitchen and seized the poker, and then heaped wood on the fire, and lighted all the candles I could find, for I felt as though I could keep up the courage better if I had plenty of light. Strange and improbable as it may appear, the next thing that attracted my attention was my poor pussy, crouched up, panic-stricken, in a corner. I was so fond of the little creature that I took her up in my arms and carried her into my bedroom, and put her inside my bed. A comical thing to do in a situation of deadly peril was it not? But it seemed quite natural and proper at the time.
All this while the blows were falling faster and faster on the door. They were dealt, as I conjectured, with heavy stones picked up from the ground outside. Jerry sang at his wicked work, and Shifty Dick swore. As I left the bedroom after putting the cat under cover, I heard the loud panel of the door begin to crack.
I ran into the kitchen and huddled our four silver spoons into my pocket; then I took the pocket-book with the bank-notes and put it in the bosom of my dress. I was determined to defend the property confided to my care, with my life. Just as I had secured the pocket-book I heard the door splintering, and rushed into the passage again with my heavy kitchen poker lifted in both hands.
I was in time to see the bald head of Jerry, with the ugly-looking knobs on it, pushed into the passage through a great rent in one of the lower panels of the door.
"Get out, you villain, or I'll brain you on the spot!" I screamed, threatening him with the poker.
Mr. Jerry took his head out again much faster than he put it in.
The next thing that came through the rent was a long pitchfork, which they darted at me from the outside, to move me from the door. I struck at it with all my might, and the blow must have jarred the hand of Shifty Dick up to his very shoulder, for I heard him give a roar of rage and pain. Before he could catch at the fork with his other hand I had drawn it inside. By this time even Jerry lost his temper, and swore more awfully than Dick himself.

Then came another minute of respite. I suspected they had gone to get bigger stones, and I dreaded the giving away of the whole door.
Running into the bedroom as this fear beset me I laid hold of my chest of drawers, dragged it into the passage, and threw it out against the door. On the top of that I heaped my father's big tool chest, three chairs, and a scuttled of coals; and last, I dragged out the kitchen table and rammed it as hard as I could against the whole barricade. They heard me as they were coming up to the door with fresh stones. Jerry said, "Stop a bit!" and then the two consulted together in whispers. I listened eagerly, and just caught these words:
"Let's try it the other way."
Nothing more was said, but I heard their footstep retreating from the door.
Were they going to besiege the back door now?
I had hardly asked myself that question when I heard their voices at the other side of the house. The back door was smaller than the front, but it had this advantage in the way of strength—it was made of two solid oak boards joined lengthwise, and strengthened inside by heavy cross pieces. It had no bolts like the front door, but was fastened by a bar of iron running across it a slanting direction, and fitting at either end into the wall.
"They must have the whole cottage down before they can break in at that door," I thought to myself. And after five minutes of banging at the back door they gave up any further attack in that direction, and cast their heavy stones down with curses of fury awful to hear. I went into the kitchen and dropped on the window-seat to rest for a moment. Suspense and excitement together were beginning to tell upon me. The perspiration broke out thick on my forehead, and I began to feel the bruises I had inflicted on my hands in making the barricade against the front door. I had not lost a particle of my resolution, but I was beginning to lose strength. There was a bottle of rum in the cupboard, which my brother the sailor, had left with us the last time he was ashore. I drank a drop of it. Never before or since have I put anything down my throat that did me half so much good as that precious mouthful of rum.
I was still sitting in the window-seat drying my face, when I suddenly heard their voices close behind me.
They were feeling the outside of the window against which I was sitting. It was protected like all the other windows in the cottage, by iron bars. I listened in dreadful suspense for the sound of filing, but nothing of the sort was audible. They had evidently reckoned on frightening me easily into letting them in, and had come unprovided with house-breaking tools of any kind. A fresh burst of oaths informed me that they had recognized the obstacle of the iron bars. I listened breathlessly for some warning of what they were going to do next, but their voices seemed to die away in the distance. They were retreating from the window. Were they also retreating from the house altogether? Had they given up the idea of effecting an entrance in despair?
A long silence followed—a silence which tried my courage even more severely than the tumult of their first attack on the cottage.
Dreadful suspicion now beset me of their being able to accomplish by treachery what they had failed to effect by force. Well as I knew the cottage, I began to doubt whether there might not be ways of cunningly and silently entering it against which I was not provided. The ticking of the clock annoyed me; the cracking of the fire startled me. I looked out twenty times in a minute into the dark corners of the passage, strained my eyes, holding my breath, anticipating the most unlikely events, the most impossible dangers. Had they really gone, or were they still prowling about the house? Oh, what a sum of money I would have given only to have known what they were about in that interval of silence!
I was standing at last out of my suspense in the most awful manner. A shout from one of them reached my ears on a sudden down the kitchen chimney. It was so unexpected and so horrible in the stillness that I screamed for the first time since the attack on the house. My worst forebodings had never suggested to me that the two villains might mount up on the roof.
"Let us in, you scoundrel!" roared a voice down the chimney.
There was another pause. The smoke from the wood fire, thin and light as it was in the red stage of embers at that moment, had evidently obliged the man Jerry to take his face from the mouth of the chimney. I counted the seconds while he was, as I conjectured, getting his breath again. In less than a half a minute there came another shout:
"Let us in, or we'll burn the place down over your head!"
Burn it? Burn what? There was nothing easily combustible but the thatch on the roof; and that had been well soaked by the heavy rain which had now fallen incessantly for more than six hours. Burn the place over my head? How?
While I was still casting about wildly in my mind to discover what possible danger there could be of fire, one of the heavy stones placed on the thatch to keep it from being torn up by high winds came thundering down the chimney. It scattered the live embers on the hearth all over the room. A richly furnished place, with knickknacks and fire furniture about it, would have been soon a fire immediately. Even our bare floor gave out a smell of burning at the first shower of embers which the first stone scattered.
For an instant I stood quite horror-struck before this new proof of the devilish ingenuity of the villains outside. But the dreadful danger I was now in recalled me to my senses immediately. There was a large canful of water in my bedroom and I ran at once to fetch it. Before I could get back to the kitchen a second stone had been thrown down the chimney, and the floor was smouldering in several places.

I had not time to let the smouldering go on for a moment or two, and to pour the whole of my canful of water over the fire before the third stone came down the chimney. The live embers on the floor I easily disposed of after that. The man on the roof must have heard the hissing of the fire as I put it out, and have felt the chance produced in the air at the mouth of the chimney, for after the third stone had descended no more followed it. As for either of the ruffians themselves dropping down by the same road, along with the stones, had come, that was not to be dreaded. The chimney, as I well knew by my experience in cleaning it, was too narrow to give passage to any one above the size of a small boy.
I looked upward as that comforting reflection crossed my mind—I looked up and saw, as plainly as I see the paper I am now writing on, the point of a knife coming through the inside of the roof just over my head. Our cottage had no upper story, and our room had no ceiling. Slowly and wickedly the knife wriggled its way through the dry inside thatch between the rafters. It stopped for a while, and there came a sudden, sharp, rattling noise, as if the wood had been split. There was a great fall of dirt thatch on the floor; and I saw the heavy, hairy hand of Shifty Dick, armed with a knife, come through after the fallen fragments. He tapped at the rafters with the back of the knife, as if to test their strength. Thank God, they were substantial and close together! Nothing lighter than a hatchet would have sufficed to remove any part of them.
The murderous hand was still tapping with the knife when I heard a shout from the man Jerry, coming from the neighborhood of my father's stone-shed in the back yard. The hand and knife disappeared instantly. I went to the back door and put my ear to it, and listened.
Both men were now in the shed. I made the most desperate efforts to call to mind what tools and other things were left in it which might be useful against me. But my agitation confused me. I could remember nothing except my father's big hand-saw, which was far too heavy and unwieldy to be used on the roof of the cottage. I was still gazing my brains, and making my head work to no purpose, when I heard the men dragging something out of the shed. At the same instant the noise caught my ear, the remembrance flashed across me like lightning of some beams of wood which had lain in the shed for years past. I had hardly time to feel certain that they were removing one of these beams before I heard Shifty Dick say to Jerry:
"Which door?"
"The front," was the answer. "We've cracked it already; we'll have it down now in no time."
Senses less sharpened by danger than mine would have understood too easily, from these words, that they were about to use the beam as a battering ram against the door. When the conviction overcame me, I lost courage at last. I felt that the door must come down. No such barricade as I had constructed could support it, but a few minutes against such shocks as it was now to receive.
"I can do no more to keep the house against them," I said to myself, with my knees knocking together, and the tears at last beginning to wet my cheeks. "I must trust to the night and the thick darkness, and save my life by running for it while there is yet time."
I huddled on my cloak and hood, and had my hand on the bar of the back door, when a piteous howl from the kitchen reminded me of the existence of poor pussy. I ran in and huddled the creature up in my apron. Before I was out in the passage again, the first shock from the beam fell on the door. The upper hinge of the door, the chairs and the coal-scuttle, forming the top of my barricade, were hurled, rattling, on to the floor, but the lower hinge of the door, and the chest of drawers and the tool-chest still kept their places.
"One more!" I heard the villains cry—"one more run with the beam, and down it comes!"
Just as they must have been starting for that "one more run," I opened the back door and let out into the night, with a full bag of bank notes in my bosom, the silver spoons in my pocket and the cat in my arms. I threaded my way easily enough through the familiar obstacles in the back yard, and was in the pitch darkness of the moor before I heard the second shock of the beam and the crash which told me that the whole door had given way.
In a few minutes they must have discovered the effect of my flight with the pocket-book, for I heard the voices of the two men as they were running out to pursue me. I kept on at the top of my speed, and the noise soon died away. It was so dark that twenty thieves instead of two would have found it useless to follow me.
How long I was before I reached the farm-house—the nearest place to which I could fly for refuge—I can not tell you. I remember that I had just sense enough to keep the wind at my back (having observed at the beginning of the running race a blow toward Moor Farm), and to go on resolutely through the darkness. In all other respects I was by this time half crazed by what I had gone through. If it had so happened that I had not changed at all, I had observed its direction early in the evening, I should have gone astray, and have probably perished of fatigue and exposure on the moor. Providentially, it still blew steadily toward Moor Farm for hours past, and I reached the farm-house with my clothes wet through, and my brain in a high fever. When I made my alarm at the door, they had all gone to bed but the farmer's eldest son, who was sitting up late over his pipe and newspaper. I must have mustered strength enough to gasp out a few words, telling him what was the matter, and then fell down at his feet, for the first time in my life in a deadly swoon.
That swoon was followed by a severe illness. When I got strong enough to look about me again, I found myself in one of the farm-house beds—my father, Mrs. Knifiton, and the doctor were all in the room—my cat was asleep at my feet, and the pocket-book that I had saved lay on the table by my side.
There was plenty of news for me to hear as soon as I was fit to listen to it. Shifty Dick and the other rascal had been caught, a long time in prison waiting their trial at the next assizes. Mr. and Mrs. Knifiton had been so shocked at the danger I had run—for which they blamed their own want of thoughtfulness in leaving the pocket-book in my care—that they insisted on my father's removing from our lonely home to a cottage on their land, which we were to inhabit rent free. The bank-notes that I had saved were given to me to buy furniture with, in place of the things that the thieves had broken. These pleasant tidings assisted so greatly in promoting my recovery, that I was soon able to relate to my friends at the farm-house the particulars that I have written here. They were all surprised and interested, but no one, as I thought, listened to me with such breathless attention as the farmer's eldest son. Mrs. Knifiton noticed this too, and began to make jokes about it, in her light-hearted way, as soon as we were alone. I thought little of her jesting at the time; but when I got well, and we went to live at our new home, "the young farmer," as he was called in our parts, constantly managed to meet me out of doors. I had my share of vanity, like other young women, and I began to think of Mrs. Knifiton's jokes with some alacrity. To be brief, the young farmer managed one Sunday—I never could tell how—to lose his way with me in returning from church, and before we found out the right road home again he had asked me to be his wife.

His relations did all they could to keep us asunder and break off the match, thinking a poor stone mason's daughter no fit wife for a prosperous yeoman. But the farmer was too obstinate for them. He had a fine form of answer to all their objections. "A man, if he is worth the name, marries according to his own notions, and to please himself," he used to say. "My notion is, that when I take a wife I am placing my character and my happiness—the most precious things I have to trust—to her hands. I care for the woman I mean to marry had a small charge confided to her care, and showed herself worthy of it at the risk of her life. This is proof enough for me that she is worthy of the greatest charge I can put into her hands. Rank and riches are fine things, but the certainty of getting a good wife is something better still. I'm of age, I know my own mind, and I mean to marry the stone mason's daughter, and to care for the woman I mean to marry had a small charge confided to her care, and showed herself worthy of it at the risk of her life. This is proof enough for me that she is worthy of the greatest charge I can put into her hands. Rank and riches are fine things, but the certainty of getting a good wife is something better still. I'm of age, I know my own mind, and I mean to marry the stone mason's daughter, and to care for the woman I mean to marry had a small charge confided to her care, and showed herself worthy of it at the risk of her life. This is proof enough for me that she is worthy of the greatest charge I can put into her hands. Rank and riches are fine things, but the certainty of getting a good wife is something better still. I'm of age, I know my own mind, and I mean to marry the stone mason's daughter, and to care for the woman I mean to marry had a small charge confided to her care, and showed herself worthy of it at the risk of her life. This is proof enough for me that she is worthy of the greatest charge I can put into her hands. Rank and riches are fine things, but the certainty of getting a good wife is something better still. I'm of age, I know my own mind, and I mean to marry the stone mason's daughter, and to care for the woman I mean to marry had a small charge confided to her care, and showed herself worthy of it at the risk of her life. This is proof enough for me that she is worthy of the greatest charge I can put into her hands. Rank and riches are fine things, but the certainty of getting a good wife is something better still. I'm of age, I know my own mind, and I mean to marry the stone mason's daughter, and to care for the woman I mean to marry had a small charge confided to her care, and showed herself worthy of it at the risk of her life. This is proof enough for me that she is worthy of the greatest charge I can put into her hands. Rank and riches are fine things, but the certainty of getting a good wife is something better still. I'm of age, I know my own mind, and I mean to marry the stone mason's daughter, and to care for the woman I mean to marry had a small charge confided to her care, and showed herself worthy of it at the risk of her life. This is proof enough for me that she is worthy of the greatest charge I can put into her hands. Rank and riches are fine things, but the certainty of getting a good wife is something better still. I'm of age, I know my own mind, and I mean to marry the stone mason's daughter, and to care for the woman I mean to marry had a small charge confided to her care, and showed herself worthy of it at the risk of her life. This is proof enough for me that she is worthy of the greatest charge I can put into her hands. Rank and riches are fine things, but the certainty of getting a good wife is something better still. I'm of age, I know my own mind, and I mean to marry the stone mason's daughter, and to care for the woman I mean to marry had a small charge confided to her care, and showed herself worthy of it at the risk of her life. This is proof enough for me that she is worthy of the greatest charge I can put into her hands. Rank and riches are fine things, but the certainty of getting a good wife is something better still. I'm of age, I know my own mind, and I mean to marry the stone mason's daughter, and to care for the woman I mean to marry had a small charge confided to her care, and showed herself worthy of it at the risk of her life. This is proof enough for me that she is worthy of the greatest charge I can put into her hands. Rank and riches are fine things, but the certainty of getting a good wife is something better still. I'm of age, I know my own mind, and I mean to marry the stone mason's daughter, and to care for the woman I mean to marry had a small charge confided to her care, and showed herself worthy of it at the risk of her life. This is proof enough for me that she is worthy of the greatest charge I can put into her hands. Rank and riches are fine things, but the certainty of getting a good wife is something better still. I'm of age, I know my own mind, and I mean to marry the stone mason's daughter, and to care for the woman I mean to marry had a small charge confided to her care, and showed herself worthy of it at the risk of her life. This is proof enough for me that she is worthy of the greatest charge I can put into her hands. Rank and riches are fine things, but the certainty of getting a good wife is something better still. I'm of age, I know my own mind, and I mean to marry the stone mason's daughter, and to care for the woman I mean to marry had a small charge confided to her care, and showed herself worthy of it at the risk of her life. This is proof enough for me that she is worthy of the greatest charge I can put into her hands. Rank and riches are fine things, but the certainty of getting a good wife is something better still. I'm of age, I know my own mind, and I mean to marry the stone mason's daughter, and to care for the woman I mean to marry had a small charge confided to her care, and showed herself worthy of it at the risk of her life. This is proof enough for me that she is worthy of the greatest charge I can put into her hands. Rank and riches are fine things, but the certainty of getting a good wife is something better still. I'm of age, I know my own mind, and I mean to marry the stone mason's daughter, and to care for the woman I mean to marry had a small charge confided to her care, and showed herself worthy of it at the risk of her life. This is proof enough for me that she is worthy of the greatest charge I can put into her hands. Rank and riches are fine things, but the certainty of getting a good wife is something better still. I'm of age, I know my own mind, and I mean to marry the stone mason's daughter, and to care for the woman I mean to marry had a small charge confided to her care, and showed herself worthy of it at the risk of her life. This is proof enough for me that she is worthy of the greatest charge I can put into her hands. Rank and riches are fine things, but the certainty of getting a good wife is something better still. I'm of age, I know my own mind, and I mean to marry the stone mason's daughter, and to care for the woman I mean to marry had a small charge confided to her care, and showed herself worthy of it at the risk of her life. This is proof enough for me that she is worthy of the greatest charge I can put into her hands. Rank and riches are fine things, but the certainty of getting a good wife is something better still. I'm of age, I know my own mind, and I mean to marry the stone mason's daughter, and to care for the woman I mean to marry had a small charge confided to her care, and showed herself worthy of it at the risk of her life. This is proof enough for me that she is worthy of the greatest charge I can put into her hands. Rank and riches are fine things, but the certainty of getting a good wife is something better still. I'm of age, I know my own mind, and I mean to marry the stone mason's daughter, and to care for the woman I mean to marry had a small charge confided to her care, and showed herself worthy of it at the risk of her life. This is proof enough for me that she is worthy of the greatest charge I can put into her hands. Rank and riches are fine things, but the certainty of getting a good wife is something better still. I'm of age, I know my own mind, and I mean to marry the stone mason's daughter, and to care for the woman I mean to marry had a small charge confided to her care, and showed herself worthy of it at the risk of her life. This is proof enough for me that she is worthy of the greatest charge I can put into her hands. Rank and riches are fine things, but the certainty of getting a good wife is something better still. I'm of age, I know my own mind, and I mean to marry the stone mason's daughter, and to care for the woman I mean to marry had a small charge confided to her care, and showed herself worthy of it at the risk of her life. This is proof enough for me that she is worthy of the greatest charge I can put into her hands. Rank and riches are fine things, but the certainty of getting a good wife is something better still. I'm of age, I know my own mind, and I mean to marry the stone mason's daughter, and to care for the woman I mean to marry had a small charge confided to her care, and showed herself worthy of it at the risk of her life. This is proof enough for me that she is worthy of the greatest charge I can put into her hands. Rank and riches are fine things, but the certainty of getting a good wife is something better still. I'm of age, I know my own mind, and I mean to marry the stone mason's daughter, and to care for the woman I mean to marry had a small charge confided to her care, and showed herself worthy of it at the risk of her life. This is proof enough for me that she is worthy of the greatest charge I can put into her hands. Rank and riches are fine things, but the certainty of getting a good wife is something better still. I'm of age, I know my own mind, and I mean to marry the stone mason's daughter, and to care for the woman I mean to marry had a small charge confided to her care, and showed herself worthy of it at the risk of her life. This is proof enough for me that she is worthy of the greatest charge I can put into her hands. Rank and riches are fine things, but the certainty of getting a good wife is something better still. I'm of age, I know my own mind, and I mean to marry the stone mason's daughter, and to care for the woman I mean to marry had a small charge confided to her care, and showed herself worthy of it at the risk of her life. This is proof enough for me that she is worthy of the greatest charge I can put into her hands. Rank and riches are fine things, but the certainty of getting a good wife is something better still. I'm of age, I know my own mind, and I mean to marry the stone mason's daughter,

J. Wakefield & Co.,
JUST received 5000 Rolls HOUSE PAPER. 2344

ALBION F. HARRIS, }
 BENJ. F. HARRIS, }
 May 12, 1865, } PCRTLAND.
 6m*21

Net Twine.
NOTTON Net Twine and Trawl Gangings, of the best quality, at the Brook.
H. H. CRIE,

Iron and Steel, Spikes,
AILS, &c., &c., at the Brook.
20
H. H. CRIE.

ROCKLAND, MAINE.

answer all orders for his services, in the city, elsewhere where there is no auctioneer duly licensed and appointed.

Rockland, April 1, 1865.

15tf

chasing. S. P. PRESCOTT, Pillsbury's Wharf.
Foot of Park Street.
Rockland, April 3, 1865. 164